National research shows smokers continue to be the worst litter bugs

Australians' littering habits have resulted in a 7% increase in volume of litter across the country in the latest results of the Keep Australia Beautiful National Litter Index released by Keep Australia Beautiful and the Minister for the Environment and Water Resources, Malcolm Turnbull MP today.

The results indicate that smokers remain the largest contributors to the number of litter items counted in Australia, with cigarette butts accounting for almost half of the total number of litter items in the last count.

According to Keep Australia Beautiful National Chairman, Don Chambers, "Only 20% of Australians may smoke, but by failing to dispose of their cigarette butts properly, they are generating one of Australia's worst litter problems and seriously impacting on our environment and water quality."

"This represents 400 million* cigarette butts being used every week, with a significant number of these ending up as litter. And whilst there has been a slight drop in the number of butts counted in our research over the past two years, it is clear that far more needs to be done."

Meanwhile the proportion of highway litter continued to rise in the period between May and November 2006 and is almost a third (32%) of all litter now, compared to just over a quarter (27%) a year ago. In terms of volume, illegal dumping has also been identified as a major contributor to Australia's litter problem and is a problem area for New South Wales.

"Litter, especially items that are washed into our waterways, is a serious environmental problem. Australians are more aware than ever of how precious water is on this continent and value our coasts and oceans – so it doesn't make sense to be damaging them through thoughtless littering."

This is something that can be easily fixed if everyone simply disposed of their packaging and litter responsibly. It's a matter of thinking before throwing." Mr Chambers said.

To coincide with the release of the NLI results, Keep Australia Beautiful is giving away 2,000 'Stubbi' personal ashtrays featuring the KAB logo in every State and Territory. In partnership with the Nova Radio Network, smokers will be able to pick up a personal ashtray from the Nova 'Casanova street teams' throughout the week in NSW and along the Central Coast.

Editors notes:

The Keep Australia Beautiful National Litter Index is the only national, twice yearly, quantitative measure of litter in Australia and is based on a methodology that has been refined over 20 years. It details litter by type, by location and by brand and compares between representative sites in each state rather than the full area or population of the state. The Neighbourhood Litter Count – a version for members of the public to measure litter in their own neighbourhood can be found at www.kab.org.au
